Continuation of 11. does NOT place the application in condition for allowance because: Applicants contend, Dwek "fails to teach or suggest that a user is presented with a recommended menu including 'a plurality of official site access information for accessing predetermined content providing servers'." Examiner respectfully disagrees. Dwek teaches that each user is presented with sites allowing the user to access music in a variety of ways (col. 4, lines 46-52 and lines 61-64). Dwek further teaches that the online music system includes different types of channels (col. 10, lines 4-20). Thus, Dwek teaches presenting an interface with a menu that includes various types of channels allowing the user access to music via song file servers/online music database. Applicants further contend that Dwek fails to teach the "receiving" and "registering" limitations. Examiner respectfully disagrees. Dwek teaches that the user may create a particular playlist using the music player/media that is resident on that particular user's computer and via the user-defined channel (col. 5, lines 9-20 and col. 9, lines 19-30). Once the playlist is created it may be shared with other users, i.e. received by other users at their particular music player resident on their machines, and is listed under the user-defined tab (col. 9, lines 32-45 and col. 10, lines 21-47). Furthermore, since Dwek teaches that the user-defined channel keeps track of the user's musical preferences and separates them into various channels which can be selected in the channel selection box, this is equivalent to registering the official site with the personalized menu including songs that have been added as falling under the user's musical preferences (col. 10, lines 13-67). Thus, Dwek also teaches the "receiving" and "registering" steps. Therefore, it is the Examiner's conclusion that the claims, as presented, are not patentably distinct from the prior art of record.
